

Acknowledgments

We want foremost to acknowledge and celebrate the late Carl Klaus, teacher and mentor to both of us. It was his idea for this collection, and many pieces here benefit from Carl's deep expertise in the essay. We also appreciate the encouragement of Jean Lloyd-Jones, an esteemed leader in Iowa politics and women's rights. Jean and Jix made a wonderful, formidable partnership.

We want to acknowledge the patience of the contributors to this volume, who endured some false starts and delays on our part yet stuck with the project with great generosity.

Thanks to Mike Palmquist, publisher, and the staff of the WAC Clearinghouse and the University Press of Colorado.

We're grateful to Emily Kirkpatrick, Colin Mucray, and Lisa Avetesian for permission to reprint material previously published by NCTE; to James McCoy, director of the University of Iowa Press; to Steve Semken, publisher and founder of Ice Cube Press; and to William Sewell, David Masiel, and John Boe, editors over the years at the wonderful journal Writing on the Edge. Elizabeth Stuckey-French supported us in bringing Ned's draft work to its final form. We wish Ned were here for its publication.

We appreciate the patience and insights of our spouses, Becky Bradway and Kate Carroll de Gutes, each themselves nonfiction writers.

Finally, we want to acknowledge the English Department of the University of Iowa for having played such an important role in our educations—and the educations of so many of this book's contributors. From the 1970s, when creative nonfiction was a dim glowing ember in American universities, Iowa has blown insistent breath on the genre, lighting and warming its readers and writers.
